Research Assistant Law School

Stanford Law professor Michelle Wilde Anderson is seeking a graduate student to serve as a research assistant for her project on local government in poor, post-industrial areas across the country. The research assistant will work on local government revenues, spending, and demographics, which will require interest and experience with quantitative analysis and large census datasets. The work will require an average of 3-4 hours per week during the fall term and a biweekly group meeting. The research assistant would ideally continue their work in the winter and/or spring quarters. To apply, please email a note of interest and your resume to manderson@law.stanford.edu [1].

Reference Information

Publication Date:

October, 2017

Category:

Center News

• Login
Back to Top

• Research
• Programs
• Publications
• News
• Subscribe
• Contact

Stanford University | © 2017 Stanford Center on Poverty and Inequality
All rights reserved

Source URL: http://inequality.stanford.edu/news-events/center-news/research-assistant-law-school

Links
[1] mailto:manderson@law.stanford.edu