The Studies in Social Inequality Book Series was founded in response to the takeoff in economic inequality, the persistence or slowing decline in other forms of inequality, and the resulting explosion of research attempting to understand the sources of poverty and inequality. The series is dedicated to publishing agenda-setting research and theory on socioeconomic, gender, and race-based inequalities. The editors, David B. Grusky and Paula England, are committed to representing diverse methodologies and approaches, including conceptual and theoretical treatises, qualitative and quantitative analyses, and comparative and case-study approaches.

Information about the entire Studies in Social Inequality Book Series and purchasing options are available from Stanford University Press.

Sponsor: The Stanford Center for the Study of Poverty and Inequality
Publisher: Stanford University Press
Series Editors: David B. Grusky and Paula England
The New Gilded Age

Social Class and Changing Families in an Unequal America

Class and Power in the New Deal

Making the Transition

Dividing the Domestic

Gendered Trajectories

Shifting Ethnic Boundaries and Inequality in Israel

Creating Wealth and Poverty in Postsocialist China